Case Study

Wearables Manufacturer Needs Specialized Talent

The Challenge

An innovative wearable technology manufacturer often needed consultants with highly specialized skill sets to provide their expertise on unique projects. Each time, they turned to Oxford because we've had a long history of providing them with the high quality talent they need – since 2001, in fact. On one recent occasion, our client needed a consultant with experience working with CSR (Cambridge Silicon Radio) in order to meet a development deadline.

The Solution

Following our client's Thursday afternoon call, we identified a qualified and available consultant within 24 hours. Once the client approved, the Oxford team made the necessary travel arrangements for the consultant to be on-site on Monday morning. Because CSR is a niche product, our ability to fill the position so rapidly was exceptionally beneficial in enabling our client to maintain their project schedule.

The consultant's expertise was seen to be so useful that the client extended the assignment for 6 months so that he could support the product's development up to its delivery deadline.

The Result

Although the engagement was originally meant to last only 3 days, the consultant's expertise was seen to be so useful that our client extended the assignment for 6 months so that he could support the product's development up to its delivery deadline. The deadline was met and our client was very pleased with our consultant's contributions to the project. In subsequent months, we continued to supply the client with consultants in other various specialties, including Bluetooth™ and MIPI™.
